The APPEAL is in receipt of a copy of the Annual Register of the Nevada State University from the President Stephen D. Jones, Ph. D. It is a well prepared pamphlet, full of information in regard to the facilities for the education of the rising generation. It sets forth an excellent list of students and shows a visible increase within the last few years.

The rapidity with which opium smoking has increased in New York has attracted the attention of the police authorities, but, as in San Francisco, the devotees of the drug manage to get the best of those who wish to save them from their own weakness. All through the densely populated districts, where apartment houses abound, joints are found. Even the higher class of houses are not exempt, and where it is suspected that the police have discovered the existence of the layout, it is immediately removed. The employment of female detectives has been tried with some degree of success, but nevertheless the police authorities admit that the habit is not only growing steadily, but that it is beyond their control. The Chinese introduced the habit into New York as they did in San Francisco, but the joints, as well as their patrons, seem to be in the hands of the white men now. The white man has always shown a wonderful capacity for adopting the mongolian vices.

KURRAH!

The President signed the silver bill immediately upon its receipt at the White House.

"A Long Lane."

At the Opera House this evening, Sedley Brown's play, "A Long Lane, or Pine Meadow" will be the attraction. It has had a long run in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and San Francisco. The play is a domestic drama in five acts, the scene being an old New England farm and the heroine the lovely daughter of the farmer. When Sedley Brown gave the title to this play he probably had in mind the old proverb, "It's a long lane that has no turning."

The piece is full of telling situations and clever dialogue. It is the story of a pretty, confiding country girl betrayed into a secret marriage with a villain, who casts her aside and wants to marry her sister; the sister learns the truth, and escaping from the villain, takes the unfortunate Daisy and her child to New York, where she is successful as an actress, and where the principal scenes are laid. The villain holds a mortgage on the farm of the Meadows family which he uses as a means of intimidating them; but he is frustrated by the gallantry of a retired gambler and the happy blunder of the comedian. The sister gives up the stage after she has made enough to pay off the mortgage, and decides to marry her true country lover, who temporarily discarded her because of his prejudice against her adoption of the stage.

The company carries a flock of trained sheep which appear in the great farm scene, and will use all the original scenery and appointments.

However careful one may be in selecting meats it always remains with the butcher to allow them the opportunity.
